SHOWSIGHT — FROM THE EDITOR

I was in a bar last night that I never go to and a man dropped dead. I don't think my non-routine presence had very much to do with it, but you can never tell. Now, I have seen my share of medical emergencies and witnessed some very upsetting things — one couldn't have worked in hospitals without being exposed to death — but this was a new one on me. For this was the first time that I held the hand of a human being as he expired. I was there when Keith stopped being Keith.

When you work in a hospital you become somewhat inured to this type of occurrence. The whole atmosphere of the place suggests that, yes, all is being done, but sometimes it is not enough, or not in time. One does not lose one's humanity, but one does become accustomed to the fragility of it all. And after the first dozen or so, one can still eat dinner and sleep after seeing the end of life. It's never easy, but you do. But to have it take place in that most benevolent of atmospheres, a cocktail lounge, is such a shock to your system that you cannot quite comprehend it.

It was very quick; the man was talking, suddenly he fell backward, and by the time I got there, there was almost no pulse. Several of us attempted to administer aid — my once excellent abilities in that respect had, indeed, become rusty — but there was another couple in attendance much more up-to-date than I. And so I was forced to take a side seat. What else could I do? I took his hand and held it.

I nominally knew this guy; I knew his name, and had probably spoken to him once or twice. I had spoken to him that very evening, in a most superficial way — I think I said No, I think that's yours when he asked whose disposable lighter was laying there. Now I don't suppose we'll ever be sure whose it was. I have it, though. But that was, of course, before he was stricken.

The paramedics arrived almost before you could blink, and high-tech procedures were brought into play. But you know, I knew there was no hope. I felt the life drain, the soul or whatever leave that body. Still I knelt there. Having exhausted all possibilities, the team hoisted him up and out into the waiting ambulance. Rather than to upset the patrons, the staff at the place kept saying "He's going to be fine. He'll make it." But I knew. I knew at the hospital they were going to write down, Keith. White male. 48 years old. DOA.

I left and drove around in a state of shock, numb. And I recalled the time when life, not death, sent me into a tizzy.

The summer I was seventeen I worked full-time at a small hospital near the Wisconsin Dells: I worked The Graveyard Shift, they call it, which is, unfortunately, apt. (I also worked full-time — days — at an A&P. What can I say, I always liked to work.) My job description would sound very strange to those who have been affiliated with larger health-care facilities; I was head of admissions; in charge of the front switchboard, assistant in ER if needed, and when there was nothing better to do I had to calculate patient charges for the day. (Do not get the idea that this was a junk joint; it was a well respected hospital with an excellent staff. There just wasn't that much that went on from 11 to 7, and one person could handle all of it quite easily. Usually.)

So one night a crackly call came from the Highway Patrol Dispatcher. "Lady in labor — E.T.A. eighteen minutes." This wasn't all that unusual, and I calmly put in the call to the attending physician, upstairs in the doctor's suite; I called the head nurse in Maternity, and then proceeded to get out the necessary reams of paperwork to be completed by our little mother-to-be. The doctor and nurses assembled at the emergency entrance, and everyone was prepared.

Or so I thought. The next call from the dispatcher was slightly irregular. He hemmed and hawed around and then dropped all semblance of regulation Radio Communications Procedure. "This lady passed the patrol car and we can't catch her!" I thought that was hilarious, and chuckled to myself. I had personally outrun the highway patrol on my way to work two nights prior, so I wasn't surprised. I was prepared to like this lady a lot.

Subsequently acquired knowledge will help to explain. Not far from this hospital was a migrant workers' camp. The mother-to-be in question was not driving, HER mother was, and they did not understand enough about the States to know that the cops were there to help. (A lifetime of distrust is not forgotten in one night.) They did, however, know where the hospital was. They would not stop, and the police were afraid to give chase, for fear of an accident. Someone from the camp had called for assistance — that's how the authorities knew what was up — but the mother apparently panicked and took measures into her own hands. Hence the late-night high-speed ride.

But back at the hospital, everyone was on alert; the Emergency entrance doors were open and the staff was wired. The last thing any of us expected, however, was what happened next. As I sat at the admitting desk the front door slammed open, and in came the aforementioned ladies. Into the front lobby. I jumped up and ran to assist. They were yelling in Spanish, which I spoke, but shock and tension had eroded my usual fluency. Cuantos minutos... I hollered; Cuantos minutos — uh, los dolores, como... I was getting nowhere. Then, to my horror, the mother-to-be plopped down on the couch, let out a yell ("Dios! Salvame!" if I remember correctly) and delivered. I was the one who caught the kid.

Not a minute elapsed between the birth and the arrival of the doctor and the nurses. But in that short period of time — which seemed hours — I held in my arms a brand new life. I spent the better part of the month in a state of exaltation I had not known before, nor have felt since.

So it seems I have come full circle, now, with that birth so many years ago, and that death last night. And my musings on the subject were prompted by an unfortunate aspect, or member, of the dog fancy. As dog fanciers, we all are subjected to great depths of emotion, from the joy of winning, to the miracle of breeding, to the disappointment of losing and the devastation of loss of life, canine and otherwise. And yet I once more became aware of the one thing that is the antithesis of everything I believe in, everything I feel should be part and parcel of the dog fancy itself. And that is the trouble-makers and gossips and the damage that they do.

Of course, a little gossip can be fun. The other day I ran into a fellow member of my kennel club. He brought up the subject of someone who is always causing trouble, and I said I don't have time for that baloney, I find it boring. And he responded, and I grew to like him even more. His reply? "Yeah, skip the B.S. and get to the good parts. Like who's shackin' with who. Now THAT'S fun!"

And so we come to the reason for this writing. There are, unfortunately, those in the fancy who expend their energies ripping and chipping away at the reputations of others: Of dogs that may win, or people whose dogs may win, or anybody in the limelight, or anybody they do not like for whatever reason they have (if, indeed, the individuals are capable of reason). And in light of all I have seen in my day, I have trouble feeling compassion for these individuals. But maybe I do: I feel sorry for these people; they must not have much of a life.

Next month I promise we'll laugh about something. JMcG

Make The Best of Shipping Dogs

It seems that whenever we hear about air transport of dogs it is prefaced or accompanied by fear, remorse, anger, or any number of other negative emotions. However, as it goes with all complaints, you usually only hear one side of the issue. It can be much the same as dining out; when a problem arises a person will complain loud and long if they are unhappy, but rarely will do anything if they are pleased. Often it is the same with shipping animals — you hear a lot of complaints, but no commentary on how well the majority of shipping goes.

The purpose of this article is not to diminish the sorrow felt by those who have lost dogs during shipping, but rather to present some of the positive things about shipping and offer ways for us all to become more effective shippers ourselves.

After spending some time chatting with cargo workers at a major airport, I was surprised to find that many of the cargo workers felt that one of the problems with handling “expensive animals” for shipment was the attitude of the shippers themselves. Many cargo workers revealed resentment toward the attitude of superiority sometimes displayed by the person shipping the “valuable” dog. The workers felt that some owners were often snotty and as one said, “They lord it over you like their dog is more important than everyone else’s. Like I could care.” That doesn’t make the shipper sound too good, but honestly, we have all seen that same attitude the cargo workers were talking about at some time or other. Regardless, the bottom line here is that the airline workers think of show dogs in exactly the same light as they view passengers’ pets — they are dogs, live cargo, transport passengers. And it seemed evident from these workers that the fastest way to get them NOT to cooperate was to get snippy (actually, they used the word “bitchy”!) with them.

But, if the shippers have a problem with an air of superiority on the part of the shipper, what about the problems we all have had (at least once) with the airline workers’ attitudes towards us? Sometimes they are downright obnoxious but what can we do? One thing not to do is lose your temper and toss vitriolic insults at the workers, because ALWAYS REMEMBER, those persons (and their friends on the tarmac) are in charge of directing your live dog, and you don’t need them annoyed with you. It is much like the old adage about never making the waiter mad at you, because he is responsible for your food and YOU CAN NOT SEE what is happening when he is away from your table.

Try to be nice — even if they make you mad. Your main objective is shipping your dog safely and quickly, not repartee with a recalcitrant worker. If you have a complaint save it for the right person. Slinging threats like “Your boss will hear about this...” usually only causes the average worker (in any job) to become annoyed, and it probably won’t intimidate them in the least. Direct your complaints to the administrator who will do something about it, but until your live dog is where you want him to be, don’t lose your cool with the workers. You can usually out-nice even the nastiest person with a little ingenuity.

When you are accompanying your dogs, you have a little more control over their travel, but again, niceness will help. A woman I know makes friendly small talk with the airline personnel and “tracks” her dogs’ progress when she travels with them. If you have to switch planes and you want to be sure your dogs get on and off safely, stand and watch at the windows at both your arrival and transfer gates. Enlist the help of the staff to be sure your dog is on — most people in this country are staunch pet lovers and they are always empathetic. When you can’t carry your own dog down to the dock, be sure to tip the porter nicely and smile your thanks. Most airline personnel will do almost anything for you if you treat them with kindness, for so many people are harried and rushed when travelling that they rarely are more than perfunctory when dealing with airline workers. No matter what happens, remember that any negative reaction you leave with the workers in charge of your live cargo could negatively affect the manner in which they expedite your animal. Please take off the rose-colored glasses here, for we are dealing with human responses.

If an airline does right by you, make your verbal thanks profuse and consider a written thank you to AIR CARGO as well. Most workers have a sense of pride and, when given impetus, want to do their jobs well. If you do get a disgruntled employee, try your personal charm as a tactic to gain the response you desire. Most of all, always remember what we all know but often forget — the worker in front of you DID NOT MAKE THE RULES, so do not chastise him if there is a problem. Go to the top and raise Cain if need be, but please don’t start at the bottom.

While extravagant media coverage may often make us believe otherwise, the actual percentage of loss or injury during air transport is very low when compared to the number of live animals shipped daily all over the world. That fact does nothing to alleviate the pain and grief of those who have lost an animal but it may help people to understand that shipping is not always a deadly game of roulette.

Some rules of thumb were exuberantly offered to me by the cargo workers I spoke with and these, when followed, should make the chances of problems on your end slim. 1) Always know and follow the rules — their rules. Be on time with the correct paperwork. 2) Make advance reservations whenever allowed by the airline. (I would like to add here — always TRIPLE check your sources as to times, rules, and reservations. Also check on the weather at the point of arrival before you leave, for if it isn't within the airline's acceptable limits, they may not take your dog and you will have wasted a trip to the airport.) 3) Make sure your crate is USDA approved — no cutting corners here even if the airline is willing to take your dog in a non-approved crate. Don't do it — the crate may not hold up under crushing pressure. [Ed. note — A recent USDA ruling requires that all dogs have a water bowl inside the crate during shipping - lack of a water bowl may result in a fine for the airline or refusal of your pet. Most people I know who are shipping coated breeds simply put an EMPTY water bowl inside for short trips. JMcG] Also, double check the fastening screws before letting the dog go — be sure they are all there and tightly fastened. 4) Ship at night when it is hot, days when it is cold, even if it is an inconvenience to you. Cutting corners on anything only leaves the shipper open to problems. 5) Make sure your crate is labeled with indelible ink, noting point of destination, phone numbers, etc. And here is some great advice a ticket counter worker gave me once — be sure the clerk puts the right stickers on your crate and that they are fastened in a location where they will not easily come loose when the crate is being moved around by either its handle or the side grips. If you take precautions and follow the rules, you have avoided half of the problems inherent to shipping.

If you do have a problem, don't forget about the channels you can use to file a complaint. Go to the top with the airlines if you have to, and don't forget two over VALUABLE resources for air cargo complaints or offenses. The first and most important is the United States Department of Agriculture. The USDA is in charge of making sure the airlines comply with the Animal Welfare Act. Dr. Richard Rissler is assistant director of domestic programs for the USDA. Regional technicians are in charge of making inspections at various airports around the country. If you think you have been wronged, don't just talk about it — file a complaint, after you have made sure that an offense has in fact occurred. Another resource is the Humane Society of the United States, located in Washington, D.C. (Phyllis Wright is the person to contact if you have problems.) There is also an Air Transportation Association of America which may be of some help if you feel your complaint is serious and needs attention.

As I mentioned, this article is in no way meant to diminish the pain felt by those who have lost an animal in shipping, but rather is for offering viable ways for you to do your part in ensuring your dog's safety during shipping. □

UPDATE

★ TOP TEN EXHIBITORS ★

JANUARY THROUGH OCTOBER AKC GAZETTE

Welcome to UPDATE, your monthly rating list of breeders and exhibitors out there winning points in the show ring. As most all serious Pomeranians fanciers are, in one way or another, involved in campaigning their Poms for AKC Championship points, we feel that it is important to keep tabs on this area. The procedures for tallying the point scale are as follows: Exhibitors are credited with all AKC Championship points won in the calendar year, as published in the AKC Show, Obedience, and Field Trials Awards Book. Only this publications will be used for point credit. Many times the actual show dates will vary from the date of publication (i.e., a September show may not be published until November). The Gazette's calendar year runs from about October of the previous year until September of the present calendar year.

Points are allotted to the REGISTERED OWNER OF THE DOG ON THE DAY OF COMPETITION. Statistician: Susan Wade. Any questions concerning UPDATE may be addressed to the editor.

THE FOLLOWING IS THE LISTING OF THE TOP TEN EXHIBITORS AS OF THE JANUARY THROUGH OCTOBER AKC GAZETTE.

A CANADIAN BREEDER'S POINT OF VIEW

by Karen Bradshaw

— PUPPY MILLS —

A Problem in Both Canada and the United States

Puppy mills are a problem that both our countries have to deal with. As breeders we should work together and try to come up with a solution to this problem.

In Canada we don't have too many of them. When the breeders of purebred dogs and members of the C.K.C. find out about a suspicious kennel, we notify our C.K.C. rep. We also spread the word not to sell to these people. Now, we don't act on heresay, either. One of us breeders has been to the kennel in question, or spoken with the person. Right now we are really helpless to do anything unless:

- a) cruelty is suspected;
- b) unsanitary conditions are present;
- c) violations in registration are suspected;
- d) parentage of registered dogs is questioned.

We are a "free nation" and we can go into any profession or business we choose. It is our right as citizens of the free world. But when we go into the business, we have to get a business license and/or vendors license.

I think every kennel should be licensed. If the kennels had to be inspected by the S.P.C.A. and a committee set up from the A.K.C. or C.K.C., puppy mills could be stopped. The A.K.C. or C.K.C. committee would know the standards and know the breed in question.

Most puppy mill dogs are usually far from the breed standard. The females are usually larger and longer than life, so they can produce large litters. The males are then smaller in hopes they will produce smaller puppies. Also when these people are interviewed they are always impressed with litter size. In most cases the breeding stock are not socialized and they have temperament problems. The committee could then reject a license to this puppy mill.

I think everyone (other than kennels) should have to pay a goodly sum for unneutered pets, in licensing. Now, I know people pay for a dog license and pay extra for a female if not spayed. But these people should also have to pay a lot more for a license for each dog not neutered. This would not be enforced if you were a registered breeder with the C.K.C. or A.K.C. and had a kennel license. Now, here's how my system might work.

- Everyone that advertised puppies for sale would have to give their kennel license number before their ad could be put in a newspaper (Registered kennels - one series of numbers; un-neutered pet dogs - a different series; pets - another series).

Newspapers, etc., would put your numbers in the computer. If you had a kennel license, it would go through. Un-neutered pets would not go through. Neutered pets would go through.

- With this system only registered kennels could sell puppies, breeding stock, etcetera.

- Pet people could sell their pets if they couldn't keep them for one reason or another.

- The people who let their dogs run at large and reproduce won't be able to advertise their puppies. It would be an incentive to neuter.

- Puppy mills couldn't advertise to sell puppies.

- Without a license puppy mills couldn't export their dogs for sale.

These are just a few thoughts I have on the subject. We breeders should not worry about inspection of our kennel facilities and our business practices. If we are worried about such a plan, then we had better clean up our act.

If we all work together, I think a solution might be found. My suggestions are just that, but maybe it will get you people thinking, too. This idea of mine could cut down on all the unwanted dogs, and put an end to puppy mills. What do you think? You never know, we just might find a solution. □
